EDUCATION
FROM CHICAGO
Ghosts in the Schoolyard
Racism and School Closings on Chicago’s South Side
Eve L. Ewing

“This superbly written and researched account is at once poignant and deeply troubling, blending the personal and the academic in a way that makes the heavy subject matter accessible. Ghosts is essential reading for anyone trying to better understand the intersection of segregation and education—as well as the importance of preserving the public institutions that help shape communities.”—NPR, Best Books of 2018

“The best book about education this year. . . . The book reads like a novel…. History told from the point of view of those who were acted on, rather than the point of view of those at the top of the pyramid…. I found it difficult to put down.”

—Diane Ravitch

Making Up Our Mind
What School Choice Is Really About
Sigal R. Ben-Porath and Michael C. Johanek

“Ben-Porath and Johanek provide the most complete and revealing accounting yet of the school choice question in American education. Combining history with thoughtful philosophical analysis, it lays to rest the posturing and sloganeering that have characterized the issue for decades. It is a must read for anyone considering this significant policy matter today, and larger questions of achievement, equity, and democracy facing the education systems of tomorrow.”

Why Learn History (When It’s Already on Your Phone)
Sam Wineburg

“To grasp how children think about and use the internet as they struggle to understand history, you must know how children think. No one is more insightful than Sam Wineburg in explaining how the internet is affecting student learning today, and how it can better fulfill its promise.”—Daniel Willingham, University of Virginia

“A sobering and urgent report from the leading expert on how American history is taught in the nation’s schools. Wineburg offers a set of timely and elegant essays on everything from the nuttiness of standardized testing regimes to the problems kids have, in the age of the internet, in knowing what’s true, and what’s not—problems that teachers have, too, along with everyone else. A bracing, edifying, and vital book.”—Jill Lepore

Homeschooling
The History and Philosophy of a Controversial Practice
James G. Dwyer and Shawn F. Peters

“Beautifully done. Dwyer and Peters interweave historical, legal, and normative precedent to consider home education in all its distinctively American complexity. But their book is also eminently readable, its tone measured and generous even in portrayals of beliefs and behaviors the authors disavow. Highly recommended for anyone who wants or needs to understand homeschooling today.”—Mitchell Stevens, Stanford University

Flunking Democracy
Schools, Courts, and Civic Participation
Michael A. Rebell

Rebell makes the case that for generations America’s schools have systematically failed to prepare students to be capable citizens. Rebell analyzes the causes of this failure, provides a detailed analysis of what we know about how to prepare students for productive citizenship, and considers examples of best practices. Rebell further argues that this civic decline is also a legal failure—a gross violation of both federal and state constitutions that can only be addressed by the courts. He concludes with specific recommendations for how the courts can and should address this deficiency.

Patriotic Education in a Global Age
Randall Curren and Charles Dorn

“The fifth entry in the History and Philosophy of Education Series from the University of Chicago Press maintains the impressively high standard set by its predecessors…. The authors write with elegance and authority: their history of patriotism in schools is masterful and their general theory of education largely compelling. Like its sister volumes, Patriotic Education in a Global Age stands as a powerful testament to the value of collaboration between historians and philosophers.”—Theory and Research in Education

The Testing Charade
Pretending to Make Schools Better
Daniel Koretz

“In addition to being highly readable, engaging, and accessible to a broad, nontechnical audience, The Testing Charade is lucid, measured in tone, well argued, and amply documented. Koretz makes a powerful case that our test-based accountability policies are seriously misguided. His reminders throughout that testing per se is not the problem and his repeated calls for studies of better alternatives make his case all the more compelling. In the final third of the book, he begins to chart a better way forward. The ideas here are well worth attending to.”—American Journal of Education

The Color of Mind
Why the Origins of the Achievement Gap Matter for Justice
Derrick Darby and John L. Rury

“‘Achievement gap”—the phrase seems as normal or natural as anything we know about education. However, The Color of Mind meticulously documents the historical, social, political, and cultural context in which disparity was manufactured and is currently maintained. Everyone who cares about educational inequality should read this book.”—Gloria J. Ladson-Billings, University of Wisconsin

Education and Equality
Danielle Allen
With Comments by Tommie Shelby, Marcelo Suárez-Orozco, Michael Rebell, and Quiara Alegría Hudes
“Allen boldly confronts the core question about education in a democratic society: What is its essential purpose? Only after answering that question can we move to the next question: What kind of education should we deliver? Her answers are deep yet pragmatic. Only by enabling students to develop their capacities, particularly in language, can we ready them for the work of citizens.”—Hunter R. Rawlings III, president of the Association of American Universities

Navigating Conflict
How Youth Handle Trouble in a High-Poverty School
Calvin Morrill and Michael Musheno
“This wonderfully accessible book is a welcome alternative to gloom-and-doom narratives of school violence. Morrill and Musheno draw upon a rich repository of detailed ethnographic stories to illustrate the potential of school environments to defuse conflict by fostering trust instead of suspicion, mobility instead of containment. It is a vital message for anyone concerned about schools and youth today.”—Torin Monahan, co-editor of Schools under Surveillance: Cultures of Control in Public Education

Educational Goods
Values, Evidence, and Decision-Making
Harry Brighouse, Helen F. Ladd, Susanna Loeb, and Adam Swift
“Brings together insights from philosophy, political science, economics, public policy, and education to propose a framework for combining values and evidence for improved decision-making. Every education decision-maker—and every education researcher—would benefit from reading this book.”—David N. Figlio, School of Education and Social Policy, Northwestern University

Redefining Success in America
A New Theory of Happiness and Human Development
Michael Kaufman
“Using his rare, longitudinal data, [Kaufman] develops a sophisticated understanding of happiness and life satisfaction. . . . Our culture, he argues convincingly, has sold to the younger generation a false promise that attending a prestigious college and attaining wealth is ‘a ticket to the good life.’ Redefining Success in America does just what the title promises; it provides an original and creative answer to the question: ‘What provides fulfillment?’”—James W. Talking Art
The Culture of Practice and the Practice of Culture in MFA Education
Gary Alan Fine

“Valuable for its description of how the art world and the university have grown entangled.… Talking Art offers us an ethnography of visual-arts education: a dispatch from MFA island. Art school, Fine finds, is a subculture, with an austere patois and peculiar rites of praise and humiliation.”
—Chronicle of Higher Education
2018 288 p. 6 x 9 32 halftones

Dewey for Artists
Mary Jane Jacob

“This entirely accessible reflection on art and experience is a small masterpiece. In exploring John Dewey’s passionate, lifelong engagement with the various arts and with the meaning of democracy, Mary Jane Jacob revitalizes his unique insights for a new generation, and illustrates how we might unleash our social imaginations and dance that dialectic today. This book is for artists, yes, but also for a much broader public, including anyone concerned with the practice of living artfully in these terribly troubling times.”—William Ayers

Agile Faculty
Practical Strategies for Managing Research, Service, and Teaching
Rebecca Pope-Ruark

“Taking a pragmatic approach, Pope-Ruark outlines steps that faculty members can use to incorporate principles of Agile development into their research, teaching, mentoring, and service commitments.… I encourage you experiment with the concepts outlined in Agile Faculty.”—Kevin C. Desouza, Foundation Professor, Arizona State University

Children Draw
A Guide to Why, When and How Children Make Art
Marilyn JS Goodman

“This beautifully illustrated book … is full of excellent ideas and guidance on how to enable the best drawing possible, including which tools, resources, environments, attitudes will either help or hinder your child’s drawing, and how your emotional or value judgements have an impact on the way children draw. Aimed at parents and teachers alike, this is an essential must-have in your creative armory.”—Early Arts Magazine

How to Write a BA Thesis, Second Edition
A Practical Guide from Your First Ideas to Your Finished Paper
Charles Lipson

How to Write a BA Thesis is the only book that directly addresses the needs of undergraduate students writing a major paper. It offers step-by-step advice on how to move from early ideas to finished paper, including choosing a topic, writing a proposal, conducting research, developing an argument, and writing and editing the thesis. Lipson also acknowledges the challenges that arise when tackling such a project, and he offers advice for breaking through writer’s block and juggling school-life demands.

The Educated Underclass
Students and the False Promise of Social Mobility
Gary Roth

Roth shows how universities—touted as the best way up the economic ladder for young people—actually reproduce traditional class hierarchies. And as more graduates emerge every year into economies that are no longer creating a steady stream of stable jobs, the odds of landing one decrease—and overeducated people end up scraping for poorly compensated positions for which they’re overqualified. A broadside against the failures of our education system and our economy, The Educated Underclass aims to startle us out of our complacency, and wake us up to action.

Shut Down the Business School
What’s Wrong with Management Education
Martin Parker

Even as higher education is under attack, one area is thriving: business schools. Shut Down the Business School explains why—and builds a convincing case that they are pernicious and should be closed. Parker writes his polemic from the inside, drawing on his experience as a professor of management, and showing us that business schools are little more than loudspeakers for neoliberal capitalism, designed to produce unreflective managers whose primary focus is on their own personal rewards.

“This is a tour de force of contemporary critical management thinking. All too often, the textbooks and the MBAs get in the way of what should be the future for business—participative, value-creating and sustainable. Read, learn . . . and shut down the business school.”—Ed Mayo, Secretary General, Co-operatives UK

Teachers of the People
Political Education in Rousseau, Hegel, Tocqueville, and Mill
Dana Villa

“How to educate citizens in a society of individuals? To this demanding question Villa dedicates this refined and extremely timely book…. This book illustrates masterfully this tension through the analysis of projects of civic and political education in the works of classical authors before and after the French Revolution; it suggests a solution that brings us directly to the pragmatic mind: conceptions of a political education that stress the ‘learning by doing’ of ordinary citizens.”—Nadia Urbinati, Columbia University

The Intellectual Properties of Learning
A Prehistory from Saint Jerome to John Locke
John Willinsky

“Providing a sweeping millennium-plus history of the learned book in the West, John Willinsky puts current debates over intellectual property into context, asking what it is about learning that helped to create the concept even as it gave the products of knowledge a different legal and economic standing than other sorts of property.

“In making a conceptual and historical case for learning as a common good, The Intellectual Properties of Learning displays some of the best of learning’s virtues: attention to detail, patience with paradox, accessibility, and, above all, a desire to understand. An ambitious and hopeful book.”—Chad Wellmon, University of Virginia

The Lost Black Scholar
Resurrecting Allison Davis in American Social Thought
David A. Varel

“Highly recommended. . . . A valuable, overdue reevaluation.”—Choice

“Varel has sought to bring Allison Davis out of the shadows and he succeeds quite convincingly. This book is an important contribution to African American history, education history, and social science history. There are numerous books on African American scholars in the twentieth century, but this is the first on Davis—he is well worth the attention.”—Wayne J. Urban, University of Alabama

Education in a New Society
Renewing the Sociology of Education
Edited by Jal Mehta and Scott Davies

“Timely and thoughtful, full of interesting and intriguing arguments that made me think about our field in a new way. The ambition of this volume and the stature and insights of its contributors should generate a lively debate in the field about the core concerns of the sociology of education and what lines of theory and research could be most fruitful.”—Maia Bloomfield Cucchiara, Temple University

The Diversity Bargain
And Other Dilemmas of Race, Admissions, and Meritocracy at Elite Universities
Natasha K. Warikoo

American Educational Studies Association Critics Choice Book Award

“Warikoo … acknowledges that elite institutions of higher education commit resources to diversifying their student bodies, yet fall short of their goals with respect to race and class,… A sophisticated contribution unobtrusively informed by current theory and distinguished by substantial field research at Brown, Harvard, and Oxford. Highly recommended.”—Choice

The Adjunct Underclass
How America’s Colleges Betrayed Their Faculty, Their Students, and Their Mission
Herb Childress

“A biting monograph—some of it research-laden, some of it personal—about how universities are undermining both student learning and the lives of temporary teachers…. At the base of the author’s anger is hypocrisy: While university administrators and their funders claim to value the transformative power of higher education, they treat countless part-time faculty like expendable employees. Though the book is clearly an outlet for his own anger, Childress also seeks to inform families of college-age children what they will encounter in classrooms. An informative screed on a depressing trend that continues apace.”—Kirkus Reviews

The Good University
What Universities Actually Do and Why It’s Time for Radical Change
Raewyn Connell

Connell argues that in order to reform universities, we need to start by fundamentally rethinking what universities do. Drawing on the examples offered by pioneering universities and educational reformers around the world, Connell outlines a practical vision for how our universities can become both more engaging and more productive places.

A Perfect Mess
The Unlikely Ascendancy of American Higher Education
David F. Labaree
